BACKGROUND

As Managing Director of Project Balance, Gary brings a realism and passion to the business that is second to none. Coming from a specialist technical background in the electrical trade and years using his diving skills in various projects in the oil and gas mining and heavy engineering industries, he has a sharp awareness of the importance of building accountability, peer support and professional care in teams.

Gary commenced coaching in 2003, quickly being recognised as a leader in the industry and was soon providing training, coaching and mentorship to new coaches through the Life Coaching Institute of Australia. He brings to the coaching relationship an astute awareness of the importance of highly tuned listening, intuition, precise questioning and reflective skills. He is the master of getting his clients to the root cause of their dilemma in record time and allowing them to act quickly on the insights that come from their coaching session.

Having joined forces with the original owner of Project Balance, Karina Butera, through their work as part of the founding management team of High Ideals, Gary has a core belief in the importance of having a strong social, environmental and global conscience. He is the Global & Environmental Impact Manager for High Ideals, a role where he encourages, informs and inspires members to make positive, lasting impact in their own ways.

He brings a holistic approach to the work he conducts with his coaching clients – helping companies think deeply about their full potential and reach the broadest possible levels in their goals, their planning, policies and modes of operating. Gary's niche is within the field of conflict management and critical thinking. He thrives on the challenge of pulling dysfunctional partners or teams together into coherent, complimentary and productive units, where honesty, integrity and positive energy are the drawn out.

Senior executives can rely on Gary as a keen, non-judgemental and astute listener, confidante and sounding board. He is someone who will allow the disclosure and telling of stories to draw out the core issues, values and conditioning that underpin much of what can keep one stuck in their patterns. He will keep those he works with true to their values, wisdom and vision, and ensure they stay accountable to themselves, their teams, the shareholders, and most importantly, the greater good of the business world and environment they work within.

If you are looking to get to the crux of any matter, sharpen your vision and gain rapid clarity on the steps required to creating it, we highly recommend Gary as the facilitator to the change you require.
